

got the personnel and equipment to the fires deserved to be called heroes as well.

It wasn't just primitive equipment that firefighters of the day had to contend with. Lack of regulation in most cities' departments often meant that firefighters were overworked. In New York City at the time, for example, it was ordinary for firefighters to spend 9 out of 10 days on duty—leaving little time for rest or family. After

Page
numbers

Journal of Firefighting - Volume 12, Issue 1

Page 132 of 132 -145

Journal
name

Volume and
issue